Holocaust-denying bishop's visit axed

PETER KOHN, JUNE 12, 2014

Bishop Richard Williamson will not be allowed to visit Australia.

AN anti-Semitic British churchman with a record of denying the Holocaust will not be allowed to visit Australia after The AJN alerted the government to his views.

Bishop Richard Williamson – who has publicly denied that six million Jews were killed during the Shoah, insisting that at most the number of victims was between 200,000 and 300,000 – was scheduled to travel to the country later this month.

The cleric has also claimed there is no evidence of any Jews being killed in gas chambers, and has described Jews as “enemies of Christ” responsible for “changes and corruption” within the Catholic Church.

Williamson, a member of “The Resistance”, a conservative grouping within the Catholic Church that rejects the landmark rapprochement with Jews in Vatican II in the 1960s, has previously been found guilty by a German court of inciting racial hatred, Last week, after learning of Williamson’s travel plans, The AJN contacted the Department of Immigration and Border Control to inquire if he had been granted a visa and to alert Immigration Minister Scott Morrison to his views.

The following day, a spokesperson contacted The AJN saying, “The individual’s visa has been cancelled,” and noting that the minister was “appreciative” of the newspaper drawing his attention to the matter.

The Executive Council of Australian Jewry (ECAJ) also contacted the Department of Immigration last week. Noting Williamson’s views and past, ECAJ urged that he be banned from the country in line with legislation that allows the minister to refuse or cancel a visa on character grounds, having regard to the person’s past criminal record or if there is a significant risk that during that person’s visit he or she would vilify a segment of the Australian community.

Welcoming the government’s decision, ECAJ executive director Peter Wertheim said, “The Minister seems to have drawn the correct conclusion that if Williamson were to be allowed into Australia there is a significant risk he would vilify the Jewish community.”

Describing the Minister’s decision as “a welcome affirmation that [Williamson’s] vile and hateful ideas will not be tolerated in Australia”, B’nai B’rith Anti-Defamation Commission chair Dr Dvir Abramovich added, “I am dismayed that any church or religious group in Australia would embrace a Holocaust denier and give legitimacy to his disgraceful lies.”

It is not clear whether Williamson's visit was sanctioned by the Catholic Church in Australia, but a spokesperson for Archbishop Christopher Prowse, who is Consultor to the Holy See's Commission for Religious Relations with the Jews, confirmed that the Canberra-based archbishop had no knowledge of the planned visit. Rabbi Fred Morgan, a professorial fellow of the Australian Catholic University's (ACU) Faculty of Theology and Philosophy, said Williamson's views "would be anathema - to use a Christian term - to the scholars at ACU, all of whom support the openness and change in direction represented by Vatican II and the document on Jewish-Catholic relations Nostra Aetate, which eschews all forms of anti-Semitism". Williamson was one of four priests illicitly ordained by self-styled Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre in 1988, which resulted in an excommunication that was revoked in 2009 by former pope Benedict XVI. The pontiff declared he had had no prior knowledge of Williamson's comments on the Shoah and suspended him from his episcopal functions until he unequivocally and publicly repudiated his false assertions about the Holocaust. <http://www.jewishnews.net.au/holocaust-denying-bishops-visit-axed/35598>

Leaders laud East Jerusalem stance

GARETH NARUNSKY, JUNE 13, 2014

Attorney-General George Brandis.

ISRAELI Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has lauded the Australian government after Attorney-General George Brandis (pictured) clarified last week the Coalition does not refer to East Jerusalem as "occupied".

In a statement authorised by Foreign Minister Julie Bishop last Thursday, Senator Brandis told a Senate Estimates hearing that using the term "Occupied East Jerusalem" is unhelpful to the peace process.

It followed a heated debate the previous evening, at which Greens Senator Lee Rhiannon and Independent Nick Xenophon both repeatedly asked Senator Brandis whether the Coalition regarded East Jerusalem as occupied.

In Thursday's statement, Senator Brandis said: "The description of areas which are the subject of negotiations in the course of the peace process by reference to historical events is unhelpful.

"The description of East Jerusalem as 'Occupied East Jerusalem' is a term freighted with pejorative implications, which is neither appropriate nor useful.

"It should not and will not be the practice of the Australian government to describe areas of negotiations in such judgmental language."

Netanyahu praised this stance at his weekly cabinet meeting on Sunday. "To say this sharply and with such clarity and, I would say, courage, is refreshing given the chorus of hypocrisy and ignorance; ignorance not only of ancient history, but of recent and current history," he said.

Zionist Federation of Australia president Danny Lamm commended the government "for taking a stand on this issue and for recognising that the final status of Jerusalem can only be resolved by a return to the negotiating table".

"Any use of the term 'occupied' predetermines the outcomes of negotiations as defined in United Resolutions 242 and 338," he said.

Executive Council of Australian Jewry executive director Peter Wertheim said the fact that the United Nations routinely refers to parts of Jerusalem as "occupied" "does not make such language sacrosanct".

"The Australian government is correct in stating that the Israelis and Palestinians themselves have agreed that the final status of Jerusalem is to be worked out through direct negotiations, and that the use of loaded language by others, which prejudices the issue, serves no constructive purpose," he said.

Australia/Israel and Jewish Affairs Council executive director Colin Rubenstein also welcomed the clarification. "Prejudging the issues in dispute encourages an ongoing Palestinian refusal to make the compromises essential for [a two-state solution] to come about," he said.

But Brandis's statement has come under fire from the federal Opposition, with a spokesperson for shadow foreign affairs minister Tanya Plibersek saying, "Clear Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade advice to Labor in government was that the settlements are not in line with international law."

Former foreign ministers Bob Carr and Gareth Evans wrote an opinion piece in The Canberra Times on Sunday that was harshly critical of the position, prompting a rebuke from their one-time colleague, Melbourne Ports MP Michael Danby.

"Former foreign ministers Evans' and Carr's obsessive interest in the fine detail of the Arab-Israeli conflict was to the detriment of other more pressing issues, such as China's conflict with its East Asian neighbours and the 150,000 people killed in Syria and its resultant refugee and terrorist outflow," he said.

If you're wondering what's been happening in Iraq all at once, wonder no longer ...

On the news it is being reported that Baghdad is in imminent danger of being overrun by Al Qaeda advancing unopposed from the north.

After the solid support for Bashar al Assad was just demonstrated in the Syrian elections, Al Qaeda may have reasoned that as Syria was lost to them, then there was no point in going back home to any of the 29 countries they had originally come from, to no future, and instead decided on joining others of their ilk in the northern part of neighbouring Iraq.

And, and, become self financing too! They looted the Iraqi banks as they went. More later.

With Turkish officials also being seized in Mosul it means Turkey as a conduit for the insurgency into Syria has been over for some time.

Turks aren't needed anymore, thank you.

Since they are moving southwards and, with ease, engaging Nouri al Malaki's rapidly retreating forces as they do so, it means that they will be making common cause with the car bombers who have murdered countless thousands of innocent Iraqis since 2004.

As we should know, the car bombers are Israelis and Saudis working together, which in turn means that neither Israel nor Saudi Arabia is going to be a target of Al Qaeda - have never been, which in itself should tell you something.

What else to understand?

For the US to be sending in 4,000 troops - or to bomb from the air, to act as a barrier to the southward advance of this serially named Al Qaeda force - the names keep changing, would be against Israel's wishes, for Israel does want Iraq to cease to exist altogether.

Know the refrain: From the Nile to the Euphrates, is what is the psychic driver of the Israelis, and the Diaspora Jews.

Pretty neat, huh, looting the banks at their leisure, town after town, no risk stick 'em ups at each of the town banks - it wouldn't have been just in Mosul, there acquiring $400,000,000+.

Now no need to ask US Sec State Kerry for anything military, just buy it off the Israelis!

Eleven years it has taken to achieve the elimination of Iraq, the Israelis knew exactly that this was the outcome they were aiming at, using casual thinking Americans, Brits and Australians, who by everything anyone of them has ever said didn't indicate that they understood that the real plan all along was the disappearance of Iraq.
